Mr. Churchill in Italy

A STATEMENT from Allied Headquarters in Italy last night said:—

"It is announced from Advanced Force Headquarters that Mr. Winston Churchill has arrived in Italy."

Reuter's Special Correspondent said that no announcement was made of the purpose or the probable length of Mr. Churchill's visit.

Mr. Churchill has already been to Normandy three times since the invasion. His first visit was only six days after the invasion, and his last a few days ago, when he went to get first-hand information of the Allies' recent advances from Generals Montgomery and Bradley.

CAPTURES IN ITALY BY POLES

THE German News Agency announced yesterday that troops in Florence have been withdrawn from the northern bank of the Arno to the northern fringe of the city.

East of Florence Polish troops, supported by Italian forces, in a new attack up the Adriatic coast, have pushed forward on a six-mile front to the river Cesano, 20 miles north of Ancona, taking three towns and 300 prisoners, a Reuter telegram states.

The Polish drive, said a dispatch from Allied Headquarters, captured La Croce Francavilla and a whole line of hills commanding the Cesano valley, during the day. Night attacks secured the villages of Monterado, Corinaldo and Scapezzano, all lying about a mile south of the Cesano. The Poles ploughed forward through heavy storms and sodden terrain against bitter opposition from infantry, supported by mortars and self-propelled guns.

After suffering heavy losses in five abortive counter-attacks, the Germans were forced to withdraw beyond the Cesano river, with 8th Army troops on the southern bank. Reconnaissance patrols are already across the river.

Commandos Raid Albania

It was disclosed in London last night, states the P.A., that a successful raid by land, naval and air forces in Albania on July 29th was the first major operation of the newly-formed "L.A.F." (Land Forces, Adriatic), the purpose of which is to intensify the war in the Balkans.

The striking forces consisted of Commandos and troops of the regular army, the latter holding the beach-heads.

Resistance was stiffer than had been anticipated, and casualties were rather heavy, chief trouble coming from snipers; but, when the force began to withdraw, the garrison had been virtually wiped out, it was stated.

Drowned in Shannon

Charles Healy (22), a farmer's son, of Ballyfermoyle, Keadue, Co. Roscommon, who left his home on Monday last to attend the regatta at Carrick-on-Shannon and had since been missing, was found drowned at the quayside, Carrick-on-Shannon. A verdict of accidental drowning was passed by the Coroner's jury, with a rider to the effect that the river at this point should be railed off.

NEW U.S. ADVANCE FOLLOWS FALL OF NANTES

LATEST CABLES THIS MORNING FROM NORMANDY AND BRITTANY TELL OF BITTER FIGHTING IN ALL SECTORS FROM BREST TO LE MANS AND BEYOND. NO APPRECIABLE CHANGE IN THE SITUATION IS APPARENT, THE ALLIED COMMUNIQUE ADMITTING A SLOWING-UP IN THE ADVANCE ON FALAISE IN THE FACE OF POWERFUL GERMAN ANTI-TANK DEFENCES.

The German reports state that the British are keeping up a drumfire artillery barrage in this region, and that in the Le Mans zone the Allies, powerfully supported by battle planes, have switched their onslaught towards the north.

In Brittany, American forces have crossed the Loire ten miles south of Nantes. The Allied communiqué yesterday stated that Nantes and Angers had been entered. The Allies are still attacking Brest, Lorient and St. Nazaire, each of these ports being stubbornly defended by all three branches of the German armed forces. Lorient has been completely surrounded by the Americans from the land side.

In his reply to the request of the United States forces for the surrender of the German troops in St. Malo, Col. von Auloch, commander of the German garrison, stated, according to Reuter:—

"I thank you very much that you are fighting fairly.

"Even if the Americans would fight on the Rhine, we Germans shall continue fighting, because capitulation, according to my conception, is not compatible with the honour of the German soldier."

Following are reports from correspondents on the latest phases of the fighting:—

Wes Gallagher, A.P. War Correspondent with the American 1st Army.—

Colonel von Auloch yesterday appealed for medical supplies, and parties bearing flags crossed the 200 yards of no-man's land. As a jeep with supplies drove up to the citadel a small party appeared at a tunnel, including a medical officer, six German orderlies, and seven American soldiers, who were captured and are now released. All the Americans were blindfolded.

Doon Campbell, Reuter's Special Correspondent on the Orne Front—

All German hopes of holding any line east of the Orne and using the River's high embankments as natural fortifications were shattered yesterday by British armour and infantry, which captured the bitterly-contested town of Thury Harcourt.

General Dempsey's men are still pressing on beyond the town, and have already scooped up the village of Esson, three miles to the south-east. The German garrison left Thury and pulled back east across the river further south. Thury Harcourt was a major Allied objective since D-Day.

With the whole British twenty-mile front eastwards from Vire aflame under a scorching sun, British armour is already widening its strong, deep belt east of the river from Caen to Thury.

The original bridgehead just north of the river loop opposite Thury withstood a hellish battering night and day for three days before being allowed to expand.

Charles Lynch, Reuter's Special Correspondent on the Falaise road:

The Germans launched a series of local counter-attacks against the British, Canadian and Poles north and north-east of Falaise yesterday. All attacks—three of them made in an effort to retake St. Sylvain, east of the Caen-Falaise road—were defeated, and the Allied positions remain firm.

Rocket-firing Typhoons located a German H.Q. and destroyed it by sending a large number of rockets right into the position.

BREST ONRUSH

A German Supreme Command statement, broadcast last night, said:—

"While American tanks and motorised assault squads have launched a big onrush against the fortress of Brest, Allied warships have appeared off l'Orient.

"American forces have tightened the ring cast around the German troops still fighting in St. Malo. Fresh Allied forces are arriving. The Americans are able to register progress against dogged resistance.

"German navy squads have completed the order of destroying the harbour installations of St. Malo, and are now taking part in the street battles. Allied bomber squadrons are dropping an unending stream of explosives over the German positions. Allied E-boats have also taken up the assault."

The German News Agency said:—"Allied naval craft to-day attempted to block Lorient Harbour, but the murderous fire of the German coastal batteries forced the ships to withdraw."

Captain Sertorius, the German Overseas News Agency Military Correspondent, stated that the Allied double drive had progressed farther beyond Le Mans. Paris radio claimed that Le Mans had been retaken by German troops in a counter-attack.—(Reuter.)

Roosevelt Visits Aleutians

President Roosevelt has paid a surprise visit to the Aleutian Islands and toured the installations, states Reuter's Special Correspondent at an Aleutian Island base. The President travelled in a warship by way of Honolulu.

The Aleutians are a chain of about 150 islands, extending from the tip of Alaska across the Northern Pacific, more than half way to Siberia.

Spain's New Foreign Minister

Señor Jose Felix Lequerica, former Spanish Ambassador in Vichy, was yesterday appointed Spanish Foreign Minister, in succession to the late Count Jordana, said a Reuter's Madrid despatch.

During the Republican régime, from 1931 to 1936, Lequerica took no part in politics and lived at Bilbao. On March 4th, 1938, he became Spanish Ambassador to France, and in 1940 negotiated the armistice between France and Germany.

Army Rifle Shooting Placings

In the All-Army rifle individual championships on Thursday the close of the competition proper found Sergt. G. Cleary, 3rd Motor Squadron, and Sergt. G. McGrath, 3rd Brigade, H.Q., tying for third place with 208 points. A shoot-off to decide resulted in the pair finishing level with 107 points out of a possible 120.

Yesterday the two marksmen again tried conclusions, and this time Sergt. McGrath was a clear winner, scoring 114 points (six less than the possible), which was a record score for the six practices. Sergt. Cleary's score was 103. This result leaves the final placings as follows:—1st, Capt. Lorcan Byrne, 5th Motor Sqdn.; 2nd, Cpl. J. Cotter, 12th Batt.; 3rd, Sergt. McGrath, 3rd Bde., H.Q.; 4th, Sergt Cleary, 3rd Motor Sqdn.; 5th, Coy.-Sergt. W. Cooke, 1st Bde., H.Q.

Paris Curfew.—The German military commander of Paris has ordered a curfew from 11.15 p.m. as from to-day—"in order to facilitate relations between members of the German armed forces and the civil population," states Paris Radio.—(Reuter.)

Robot Tanks Against Canadians

A C.B.S. report from France, published in New York yesterday, said the Germans are using robot tanks against the Canadians.

The tanks are driven half-way to their objectives and then the crew get out and direct the tanks for the rest of the distance by radio.—(Reuter.)

Drastic German Restrictions

NEW measures restricting German postal and telephone services were announced by German Radio last night.

"Once a week there will be no post at all. On the other days the postman will call only once. Pillar boxes will not be emptied as often as hitherto.

"All telephones which are not serving the war effort will be disconnected. The Post Offices will not accept printed matter, samples or small parcels."

"Think twice before posting letters or lifting the receiver of your telephone. If this appeal does not help, the authorities will be forced to decree more far-reaching cuts."—(Reuter.)

MORE FOOD POISON VICTIMS

Five further cases of food poisoning, due to aertrycke bacillus, have been diagnosed at Clonskeagh Fever Hospital. These are in addition to the twenty-three cases that occurred in Dublin recently. Nineteen cases of typhoid are under treatment. There are also a few cases under observation, awaiting the result of blood tests. Two cases of typhoid are in Donegal District Hospital.

Soviet Delegation — The Soviet Union's delegation to the Tripartite Security Conference at Washington includes one military expert and three professors.—(A.P.)

WIDESPREAD RAIDS ON GERMAN OIL DEPOTS

DURING raids on German oil depôts and railway yards in France and Germany yesterday by Allied Air Forces, a dump and railway marshalling yard at Strasbourg, and rail yards at Saarbrucken, both in Germany, were attacked.

Among the targets of the 8th Air Force, Fortresses and Liberators, were fuel dumps and aerodromes near Paris, according to an Allied official report. They were dumps at St. Florentin, south of Paris; aerodromes at Villacoubay, Goussens-le-Boble and Coulommines, and railway yards at Mulhouse and Belgart in Alsace-Lorraine.

An ammunition dump in the Foret de Roumare, east of Rouen, was bombed by two waves of Marauders and Havocs. A fuel dump in the Foret de Montrichard, 23 miles east of Tours, was set ablaze by bombs. The smoke rose 10,000 feet. The operation was carried out without loss.

Major Rudolf Puchinger, one of Germany's most experienced bomber pilots, has been shot down, according to the German Radio.

An American bomber was shot down by Swiss fighters near Schaffhausen, according to a communiqué quoted by Swiss Radio. The crew of nine are reported safe.

A.A. defences and fighters destroyed more flying bombs early yesterday afternoon, when a sharp raid was launched across the Channel, the Press Association states. One coast town was shaken several times in a few minutes by the explosions of robots, some of which were destroyed in the air as they approached the coast. A bomb which fell in an inland area caused severe damage by blast to a block of flats. Windows of a bus were blown across to the opposite pavement, but the safety net held every shattered piece together. Some casualties were reported, but no one was killed.

An Afternoon at the "Tuppenny Flicks"

BY AN IRISH TIMES REPORTER.

MAKING the point that the international influence on the cinema and radio explained to some extent the changing standards of Irish youth, an Irish Times editorial last week said: "Children of the most tender years in the remotest parts of the country spend far too much of their time in the picture-houses, where they see the scum of Hollywood's cheapest productions. They are being robbed of that innocence which is the child's most precious heritage. . . ."

Last week-end I set out to measure the cinema's influence on to-morrow's citizens. I found that from twelve to fifteen of the lesser-known city cinemas cater almost exclusively for children through the afternoon. The offspring of the more well-to-do parents are escorted to the more pretentious establishments, usually on Saturday evenings. A minority of discerning parents place cinema-going in the category of a rare treat for their children. It is obvious that the vast majority of parents do not fully appreciate the extent to which young minds may be moulded by the film. The houses known to the children as "the tuppenny flicks" receive the patronage of something like 300 youngsters apiece every afternoon, which means total daily attendances of nearly 4,000. At 2.45 or 3 p.m. those second-rate cinemas come to life—fifty or sixty frail wisps of humanity begin to trail into a pathetic queue, barefoot, thin and poorly clad. The talk is excited, hushed with expectancy.

Some days ago a broiling sun beat down on a typical queue of fifty boys and girls, aged from ten to fourteen. The boy behind me in the queue appeared to be about ten years old, and he was in bare feet, patchy pants and badly mutilated shirt. A woodbine drooped, gangster-fashion, from the corner of his mouth. Like the other children, he had come south from a web of tenements.

"Gene Autry, mister, and a smashin' serial. Have you e'er a butt?" was his retort, when I inquired about the programme.

Clustered around the lurid pictorial advertisements, the boys and girls showed remarkable film wisdom and discernment, and I jotted down some of their remarks:

"Gene Autry's no . . . good; too much love. The gangsters is the best . . . there's a smasher in the . . ."

"There's a great war picture coming next week . . . the serial's on again, it's a smasher."

"The . . . . . 's full of fleas, my mother won't let me go there any more," from a young girl clutching the hand of a five-year-old.

There seemed to be general agreement on the principal film's lack of potentialities, and most of the young audience seemed to be attending only because the offerings of rival concerns had been exhausted. A look of the most profound scorn greeted my remark to one youngster that he might enjoy himself better in one of the city's parks on such an afternoon. He did not make any other reply.

VIRTUOUS COWBOY

The cinema gates flew open at 3.15 and the queue filed in. Admission to the stalls was 2d. The seats were comfortable enough, but the heat was almost unbearable, and there was a faint smell of human bodies. There was a burst of cheering when the lights were dimmed, but the first picture was not altogether successful. It showed two well-known film actors leaving their New York beds to participate in a series of extraordinary adventures at the scene of some unmapped oil-well. Owing to some defect or other, the voices, the explosions and the gun-play could be heard only with the utmost difficulty. Riding home victoriously with a smile and a song and a girl Gene Autry was more impressive, and he received a tremendous ovation when he confounded the enemies of himself and of society. Stressing his influence for good on the young generation, Autry's publicity claims that he does not smoke, kiss or kill on the screen.

From a police source I learned, however, that this type of film is regarded as one of the most insidious. There is no law in Eire, Britain or the United States giving recognition to "supermen" who take the law into their own hands and call on the police merely to open the jail gates. Repeatedly shown, such films tend to discredit the law, it is stated.

The event of the evening was, undoubtedly, the serial, which some weeks earlier had, unfortunately, to be suspended owing to electricity restrictions. It had terminated abruptly, and the outcome was being awaited with breathless interest. To the accompaniment of wild applause, it moved at a furious pace, embracing a breath-taking variety of crime and evil, but it stopped suddenly just when it seemed about to reach the pinnacle of excitement.

During the entire entertainment I counted some thirty instances of murder, violence, fire, explosions, hand-to-hand combat, "hi-jacking," gang-fighting, robbery and racketeering.

The exaggerated emphasis which one of the pictures placed on sex might be considered unsuitable for a youthful audience, but, in fairness, it should be pointed out that love scenes did not seem to impress at all.

One feature of the entire proceedings was the facility with which they could be followed, thereby naturally blunting the young appetite for good drama.

Vatican Denies Report

The official Vatican Press Service issued a denial of a news report yesterday, states Reuter's Rome correspondent. It stated: "Nothing is known about reports that the Soviet Government has proposed co-ordinated action between Moscow and the Vatican in a post-war solution of moral and social problems."

Germans Forced Back In Estonia

THE RED ARMY IS INVOLVING THE GERMANS IN A GREAT BATTLE OF MATERIAL ALONG PRACTICALLY THE WHOLE RUSSIAN FRONT, REUTER'S SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT CABLED LAST NIGHT FROM MOSCOW.

The Soviet communiqué announced that the offensive has been resumed in the Pskov direction, and that Red Army forces here have already advanced up to 15 miles on a 43-mile front.

The German Command was forced to withdraw its lines some miles south of Lake Pskov, the German commentator, Colonel von Hammer, stated.

Duncan Hooper, Reuter's Special Correspondent in Moscow, cables that the main battle, however, seems now to be raging along the East Prussian frontier, and on its issue depends—to a very great extent—the fate of thirty German divisions in the Baltic countries.

German forces, fighting almost back on the frontier, are being steadily driven back, and the Red Army is breaking up all-out attacks.

If the Red Army could be pushed back to a safe distance from the Reich border, the German Command would, doubtless, feel it possible to risk the deployment of large forces to rescue their troops cut off north and east of Riga. The stakes are high, and the Germans are acting accordingly.

North-west and west of Kaunas, General Cherniakhovsky's troops are nearing the Siaulia-Tilsit highway, which, if straddled, would provide another trunk line into Germany.

WARSAW BATTLE

Nearer Germany proper a showdown in the battle for Warsaw appears to be approaching.

Between Warsaw and Bialystok the German forces are facing a new threat as the Red Army aims concentric attacks against this salient, which has been endangering the communications of the Russian "Warsaw" army.

In the Carpathians General Petrov's mopping-up operations continue at a steady rhythm. In a number of sectors the fighting is moving beyond the foothills into the mountains proper, but there is no indication as yet that the Red Army is going to stage a direct push through the passes.

Colonel von Hammer, the German News Agency commentator, reported last night: "A new Soviet offensive on the whole front from Warsaw to Lake Pskov. Ten Soviet infantry divisions and three tank corps launched a violent offensive on a 12 miles front south of Lake Pskov. After many hours of tough fighting, Soviet tank columns hammered in a series of wedges, so that the German Command was forced to withdraw its lines some miles.

"Reinforced Soviet armour and crack motorised divisions yesterday made all-out efforts to smash their way from the Baranow bridgehead, 70 miles north-east of Cracow, towards the west. The pressure forced the Germans to withdraw the southern wing of their lines two miles."

The Soviet communiqué reported the capture of the following places: 200 west and south-west of Pskov, 50 west of Krustpils (on the western Dvina), 150 miles west and north-west of Bialystok, 100 north and north-west of Siedlce.

Sailings to be Resumed

Daily mail-boat sailings between Dun Laoghaire and Holyhead are to be resumed from Monday, August 21st, it was stated yesterday.

Regular three-day-a-week passenger services on the Belfast-Heysham route will be resumed from the same date. The Glasgow route services were restored on Tuesday last for civilians holding permits for Glasgow. In future the Belfast sailings are expected to be nightly.

No change in the position with regard to the Liverpool route is anticipated.

Japan's Main Oil Source Bombed

THREE Super-Fortresses failed to return from Thursday's raids on Sumatra and the Japanese mainland, the U.S. Army Department announced yesterday. Another Super-Fortress was forced down in friendly territory. The bombing results were good.

The communiqué said that:—"In the longest bombing mission ever undertaken," a medium force from S.E. Asia Command bases attacked the Pladjoe refinery at Palambang, in Southern Sumatra—Japan's largest source of oil in the Far East, and her major source of high octane fuel.

Simultaneously, from bases in China, another medium force attacked for one and a half hours industrial targets at Nagasaki, on the mainland island of Kyushu.

To make Tokyo safer against air-raids, more than 10,000 houses have been demolished, said a Tokyo report, quoted by the Associated Press.

Americans Executed By Japanese

The United States War Department announced last night, states Reuter, that advices from the International Red Cross report that three American prisoners of war were executed following their escape from a prison camp in Manchuria.

According to the Japanese Foreign Office, three American prisoners escaped on June 21st, 1943, and fled towards the Russian border. Stopped by a Japanese police inspector and two Mongols, one American killed the inspector and another seriously wounded one of the others. "The men were tried by a military court, condemned to death, and executed on June 31st, 1943."

General Wounded by Bomb Fragments

Major-General Rodney F. L. Keller, who commanded the 3rd Canadian Division in its assault on the Normandy beaches, was wounded by fragments of U.S. bombs which fell in the Canadian lines last Tuesday, states a delayed Reuter dispatch from the front. He was hit in the left arm and leg, and suffered a minor chest wound. He was later evacuated to hospital in England.—(Reuter.)

German Paratroop Chief Promoted

General Kurt Student, C.-in-C. of the German paratroops, has been promoted Colonel-General, Herr Hitler's H.Q. announced yesterday, according to the German News Agency. Fifty-four years of age, Colonel-General Student is the youngest officer of that rank in the Luftwaffe.

Japan's Prisoners. — Monsignor Paolo Marella, Apostolic Delegate in Japan, reporting to the Vatican on a recent visit to two prisoners' camps in Southern Japan, said he found the condition of British, American, Dutch and Canadian prisoners "generally satisfactory."—(Reuter.)

Reception of Evacuees Appreciated

THE Archbishop of Liverpool, Most Rev. Dr. Downey, who is on a visit to Dublin, interviewed yesterday, said that the kindly reception given to refugees from England on their arrival in Eire had made a very good impression on the Liverpool people, and the English people generally.

"Seventy per cent. of my people in Liverpool are either Irish or of Irish descent," said Dr. Downey, who went on to discuss conditions in his diocese. Liverpool, he said, had not been bombed for three years. There was no legitimate food or clothes shortage, but now and again the distribution was bad, but, on the whole, Lord Woolton was doing a good job. The health of the city of Liverpool, with its million citizens, was excellent. Due to the shortage of drink, there was no drunkenness problem.

Regarding epidemics, Dr. Downey said that he was a great believer in preventive medicine, which ought to be started as early as possible, especially in looking after children, the care of whom should begin before they were born. "The three fates—heredity, environment and education," he said, "write their destinies."

Dr. Downey, accompanied by the Rev. M. Sweeney, O.M.I., Inchicore, called at Government Buildings early yesterday morning and saw the Taoiseach, Mr. de Valera, and the Tanaiste, Mr. Sean T. O'Kelly. The visit lasted nearly an hour, and when seen by newspapermen afterwards Dr. Downey said that the visit had been purely personal—meeting old friends and paying his respects to the heads of the Government. He recalled that shortly before the outbreak of the present war he had met Mr. O'Kelly at Budapest, where they were both attending the Eucharistic Congress.

Dr. Downey later called at the Mansion House and saw the Lord Mayor, Alderman M. O'Sullivan, T.D.

Mr. E. Brophy's Free Trade, which was sold for 1,500 gns. at the R.D.S. bloodstock sales yesterday.

Minister May Collect Debts to Germans

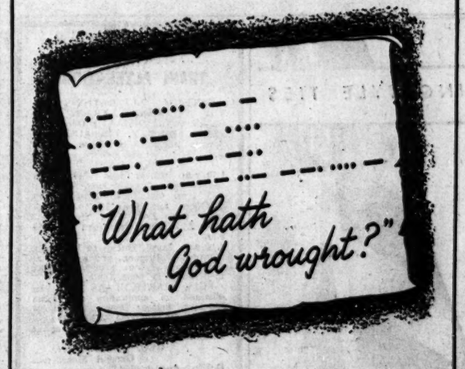

Residents in Eire owing money to persons or firms in Germany may be required to pay the amounts of the debts to the Minister for Finance. A new order made by the Government instructs people owing such debts to furnish particulars to the Minister, who is authorised by the Order to require the payment to himself of the debts. The Minister is authorised to issue receipts for any sum paid to him, the receipt to have effect as if it were a receipt from the German creditor. Details appear in an advertising column.

Cork Businessman Dead

The death is announced of Mr. Michael Joseph Daly, Ballinlough House, Cork, a well-known business man. For over half a century he was a member of the firm of Messrs. M. D. Daly, wholesale tea merchants and grocers, founded by his father, and he succeeded to the post of managing director and chairman. He was also a director of Messrs. T. Lyons and Co., Ltd., and of the Gresham Hotel. He gave notable assistance to many local charities, and for many years was hon. treasurer of the St. Vincent de Paul Society.

Senate Meeting

The new Senate will meet next Friday at 3 o'clock. The principal business will be the election of a Cathaoirleach.

"WHAT hath God wrought?" With these four words the dream of SAMUEL MORSE had become a reality—they were the first words to be flashed over the electric telegraph wire between Washington and Baltimore in May 1844. But behind that tremendous success lay a story of toil, patience, poverty and ridicule. Morse was educated at Yale University and although keenly interested in chemistry and physics he decided to become an artist. When success came to him in this profession he retired to a small shop in New Haven to carry out his experiments—years of obscurity followed but in 1837 he applied for a patent on "The American Electro-magnetic Telegraph." It was considered a "wild scheme." He went to England, France and Russia seeking aid for his invention but failure met him at every step. Eventually he induced the United States Congress to provide capital to build a line from Washington to Baltimore and in 1844 the first message went over this wire. He was then 53 years of age. From that time the growth of the electric telegraph was rapid—the Western Union Telegraph Company was organised in 1851, and in 1866 after four failures, a cable across the Atlantic was laid. Morse died in 1872 at the age of eighty-one. His system is the basis of most land telegraph systems to-day and the code of dots and dashes now generally used is known as the "Morse Code" in honour of its inventor.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Interpreting the Interpreters

Herbert Read: An introduction to his work, edited by Henry Treece. Faber and Faber. 10/6 net.

THERE was a time, not so very long ago, when art was a comparatively simple business. A man wrote a poem, or painted a picture, and his fellow-creatures were his critics. They decided whether his work was good or bad by extremely simple standards. If a painting could be said to give a fair representation of the subject it set out to represent, or if in some way it appealed to the senses, it was a good painting. The thing was as simple as that.

The next stage in man's artistic development necessitated the introduction of a race of middle-men. This artistic middleman, known as the critic, was largely an interpreter. Art had begun to stray so far from the realms of common experience that the ordinary man required an intelligible explanation of what it was all about. It was quite a convenient arrangement. The artist, no longer in direct communication with his audience, gained somewhat in stature, and the system provided congenial employment for people of artistic temperament, incapable of writing, painting or composing.

Unfortunately, the thing did not end there. The business of art continued to grow more and more complex until, in order to keep up with the artists, the critics, too, began to soar above the heads of the ordinary people. This, in its turn, necessitated the introduction of yet another race of middle-men, critics who could interpret the critics who were themselves interpreting the artist. That is the way things are at present; but, for all we know, it may be only the beginning. Before long the man in the street may be getting his art seventeenth hand.

All this arises out of an introduction to the work of Herbert Read, edited by Henry Treece, and published by Faber and Faber. For Mr. Read is both artist and critic. Not only that, but he is an artist who at some times requires interpretation, and a critic who at many times requires interpretation. In this volume we have a few examples of the work of Mr. Read, we have an article by H. W. Hausermann on his poetic work, and we have an article by E. H. Ramsden on Mr. Read's philosophy of art, a large part of which deals with his standards of criticism. So that here we have a fine example of a cycle which would only be completed by articles written by Mr. Read on Mr. Hausermann as poetry critic, and Mr. Ramsden as critic critic.

It has been said that international finance not only is not understood by anybody, but could not be understood by anybody; however, since the people who could, as it were, let this particular cat out of its particular bag are the very ones who stand to gain most by keeping it there, truth is unlikely to prevail. There appears to be every danger of a similar state of affairs arising with regard to modern art!

Wandering Woman

Gypsy in the Sun. By Rosita Forbes. Cassell. 17/6 net.

Miss Rosita Forbes has had an unusual life, and fully appreciates the fact. The most interesting part of this book, in which she describes her wanderings in many parts of the globe, deals with the situation in Syria shortly after the last war. Miss Forbes was an earnest supporter of the Arab cause, and an advocate of the idea of an Arab Federation. She appears to have been on intimate terms with the Emir Feisal and other key-men, and her story casts some useful sidelights on a problem which is still by no means solved—is, indeed, perhaps further from solution. She also talks of Germany, Abyssinia, Central Europe, North and South America, Ireland; and —a little too much, perhaps—of her acquaintances among the great and her private life. The book is sometimes interesting and sometimes insufferable. There are 55 photographs, six of which do not include Miss Forbes.

Farming Years

Glory Hill Farm (3rd Year). By Clifton Reynolds. The Bodley Head. 7/6 net.

GLORY HILL FARM in its third year has been different in many ways from what it was in its first two years. Conditions have changed, and one of the most important changes is that the author has taken charge of the farm himself instead of employing a manager. As the result of this change, Mr. Reynolds says things have been happier. What is good is that the farm is now in better shape than ever. The third year has produced more arable crops, and they have all done well But the most satisfactory piece of management is the reserve of grazing. The top field of clover ley vance of summer has brought all other grazing to an end. In former years, like many farmers under present farming conditions in Britain, Mr. Reynolds found he was "stumped" for feed.

The underlying theme throughout has been fully developed, resolving itself into the need to answer one main question: What has the land to say? Mr. Reynolds claims that there is no moonshine about this. The land, he says, only discloses its many secrets to those who wisely do not hurry. Land is not to be trifled with or cheated; it will not part with the life it stores and holds unless man and nature freely cooperate.

Poor Man's Friend

An Apostle of Catholic Dublin. By Myles V. Ronan, P.P., D.Litt. Browne and Nolan. 15/- net.

DR. RONAN has chosen another subject full of interest for his latest book. It is the story of Father Henry Young, the "Curé d'Ars of Dublin," a saintly churchman, who laboured, and lived to see the benefit of his work, among the city's poor for more than half a century.

In his study of Father Young, the author has an opportunity of surveying the social life of Dublin during the periods from 1749 to 1869. He has nothing new to add to what has already been written about the capital under the Georges, but his subject is well-studied, nevertheless. Dr. Ronan has brought to light the quiet life of a man whose only care was for his less fortunate brethren in times of famine and distress, and many of the institutions he founded are to-day firmly established in the life of our city.

Shan Bullock of Fermanagh

By Richard Rowley

A FEW months ago, on a fine spring morning, I sat at my desk, with a rising tide of papers almost at knee-level upon the floor; I had been instructed by the higher domestic authorities that the paper salvage demanded the sacrifice of my old MSS.

The long-hoarded writings of my boyhood and youth I had swept away without a sigh; but now I was busy looking through old letters from old friends—a harrowing task. There were even a few faded love-letters among them. I looked at the signatures: Myra, Isabel, Rita: the very names were old-fashioned: they smacked of the early 'nineties. Isabel? Rita? Who were they? Alas, I could not remember; and the scented notes fluttered down on the growing pile. Then my hand fell on a packet of later date. The handwriting was strong and decisive, a masculine, official hand. I had no need to search for the signature. They were letters from Shan Bullock.

First Meeting

I met him first towards the end of the last war. I was in London, and Stephen Gwynn had asked me to lunch with him at his club; Shan Bullock was the only other guest. Tall, and thin almost to gauntness, yet of fine physique, for he was built of bone and muscle, he made an impressive figure. His plentiful hair was beginning to turn grey, his complexion rather pale, but bronzed; his features aquiline and strongly carved; his eyes and mouth were melancholy. A lonely man, I thought, a man of a lonely soul; yet, though he was somewhat withdrawn from immediate contacts, he was in heart very human. When his interest kindled in conversation, his ascetic face lit up with a very compelling charm.

We sat long that afternoon over the good wine which Gwynn knew so well how to choose—and still knows, God be thanked. We fell to talking, as Irishmen will ever talk, not of the people we loved, but of places. Stephen spoke eloquently of fishing days on lonely lakes of Donegal or lonely rivers. I praised the glories of Mourne. Bullock whispered intimately of the beauties of Lough Erne and the spreading woodlands of Crom Castle.

Perhaps all Irishmen are more attached to places than to people. We feel that human loveliness must pass away, but the beauty of lake and mountain and sea, which moves our hearts, is the same beauty as we find in the songs and stories of the earliest Gael; unchanged, undimmed by the passing of near two thousand years. It is immortal.

Home-Sickness

This was the root from which the finest flower of Shan Bullock's writing sprang and blossomed. When I knew him he had lived all his mature life in England. There he had married; there his children were born. Through all these years he worked in a Government office. Outwardly he was a civil servant, diligent, responsible, successful. Inwardly he remained the boy who roamed the woods of Crom or dropped a line in the quiet waters of Lough Erne.

It was a poet's home-sickness which inspired all his writing; and the experience on which he drew was the experience of the first sixteen or eighteen years of his life. It is true that he wrote several novels of English life; they display sound craftsmanship, but the sacred fire does not burn in them as it does in "The Loughsiders," "Irish Pastorals," "Ring o' Rushes," and "By Thrasna River." It was only when he wrote as an exile, an exile from his homeland, an exile from the fairyland of youth, that he drew living waters from the very depths of his soul.

I can see that this amounts to a confession that Bullock did not possess the highest creative gift. He could not look at contemporary life and create character from a mere hint, from a momentary glimpse, as Shakespeare did; even as Dickens did. He could transmute only the metal of his own emotional experience into literary gold; and as the bed from which that metal could be dug lay on the shores of Lough Erne, and, for him, no other where, it necessarily followed that his scope was limited. He lived as completely and as permanently in the Fermanagh of his childhood, as James Joyce lived in the unchanging Dublin of his youth. It was only when the voices called to him from the past that Shan Bullock's pen was inspired, and if you read "By Thrasna River" or "Irish Pastorals," you will find how real the inspiration was, and with what moving charm it speaks from the printed page.

Short Stories

The best of the stories in these books may be placed beside the best of Tchehov's country stories. They have the same quietude, the same insight and sympathy, though, perhaps they do not display Tchehov's mastery of form. But they have a similar keen eye for landscape, and the skill to place the human figures distinct against a background of the countryside.

Bullock achieves this unity more frequently in his short stories than in his novels. The larger canvas betrays his lack of constructive power, and his tendency to leave blank patches in the middle of his picture. But within the limited frame of the shorter works, the texture is close and rich, and the design is unobtrusive, but well controlled. His great merit is his utter veracity, his unvarying integrity of mind. He tells the truth as he sees it, refusing to colour it too gaily, or to deck it with frills, to make it pretty.

At the time Bullock began to publish in England, the Scots Kailyard School, sedulously herded by the shrewd and energetic Dr. Robertson Nicoll, was achieving great popular success. These writers dealt with much the same material as Bullock used in his sketches of rural life in Fermanagh. You have only to compare their works with his to feel how light are their sentimentality and insincerity when weighed in the balance with the Irishman's stern truth and rectitude.

Autobiography

At their best, the Scots writers merely produced profitable journalese. Bullock, at his highest, gave his country the pure gold of literature. The sole profit that he reaped was the consciousness that he had given of his best. Some of the deepest of his writing is to be found in his autobiographic volume, "After Sixty Years." It deals with his one great subject, his early life on the shores of Erne. In it he not only paints the scenery which he loved, but subjects the people of that land to a close and sympathetic scrutiny. Here his mental integrity, his detachment from party prejudice, his passion for truth, are admirably displayed.

I do not think the book had any great success; I doubt if it ever went into a second edition. But, to my mind, it is one of the finest, one of the most valuable, books written about the Irish scene.

Some day, if I outlive the war, I should like to edit it, to compress it a little, and to see it published in our own country. We are not so rich in man-power that we can afford to forget one of the best, one of the sincerest of our writers. He was a man of courage, a man strong and tender, a man who loved Ireland, a man who praised his country and his people in works that have never yet found the audience amongst us which their many virtues deserve.

LET US BE DRINKING!

(After the Gaelic Folksong)

By Padraic Fallon

HE: I've a cockade of mud on my hat.
My cravat has gone loose on my neck.
My coat hangs tatter by tatter.
My periwig is a wreck.
But I'll not leave this place while I hear
The cracked cheers of my little stick
Tell me I'm lord of the fair.
I'm the devil, Boys, I'm old Nick.

SHE: On fair-days the alebush flowers
From fools' purses, and fools pay rent
On a fairy holding whose lease expires
In broken heads and devilment.
I've a bull that shakes a countryside;
And to take the thunder out of him by May
I've cows on the grass with peaceful eyes.
Take all, and leave the fair to-day.

HE: I could toss up my purse, and the air
Would float it, for that purse is light.
I'm murdered. I've red blood for hair.
But I see you with some of my sight.
Be off! What I drink is my own.
Yet drink, like the priest, must have dues,
So I'll marry—then barter you, Crone,
For the price of your shoes.

The End of An Era

The Future of Economic Society. By Roy Glenday, M.C. Macmillan. 16/- net.

THE title of this book altogether belies its scope; indeed, the most valuable chapters are entirely outside its apparent terms of reference. The author's aim is the application to economic problems of the scientific method, and his conclusions are those which millions of others have reached independently of Berdyaev, Karl Mannheim and Reinhold Niebuhr—that mankind is witnessing the breakdown of a civilisation, of a structure built on the economic idea of the individual pursuit of wealth.

Mr. Glenday contends, with considerable justification, that economists have been unduly preoccupied with studying the behaviour of an abstract unit, "the economic man," instead of dealing with man as a member of a group or society, which would justify, inter alia, predictions of reasonable accuracy concerning the future trends of present tendencies.

In an illuminating historical survey the author shows how human institutions are subject to the laws of organic evolution. He would agree that there is a progressive, not a cyclical, pattern in history, but he emphasises that the evolution is not continuous—that, as in all organic life, there is a tendency to spasmodic spurts, between which are intervals when the economic system pauses for reorganisation of its component parts before advancing to a higher level. Thus, the European order collapsed in the 13th century, and a society based on the concept of the "social" man was replaced by one founded on the "individual" man, which ultimately developed into an order built on the "industrial" man. Mr. Glenday's ideal is a return to the concept of the "social" man, where the absolute welfare of the individual is subordinated to the general good of the community.

An important principle in the thesis is that every organism has an optimum size, beyond which further growth leads to disaster. During the inter-war period, 1919-39, the economic system of the capitalist world had exceeded this optimum size. Equilibrium was achieved, as Lord Keynes so often pointed out, with many of the factors of production unemployed. Technical progress enabled the maintenance of the standard of living by the employment of fewer workers; those displaced were unwanted, because the early promise of mechanisation to provide alternate avenues of absorption was not realised. Chronic unemployment became the distinguishing feature of a civilisation that could not integrate into its economic system a vast army of its dispossessed without the assistance of a total war. To many economists this merely represented a maladjustment of the system; to Mr. Glenday it is a symptom that the capitalist system, having expanded beyond its optimum size, is breaking down.

His conclusion is that the industrial individualistic system has outlived its existence, and, though not bad in itself, has been a necessary phase in the evolution towards a new life in which the welfare of society, not the profit of the individual, will be the aim of economic activity. We can readily believe Mr. Glenday that to achieve this will require as great a revolution in ideas as did the first adoption of individualism in its day. But he is not very helpful in showing how the great aim is to be realised. For him Socialism is no solution; his affection for the "servile state" is no greater than Mr. Belloc's. The claims of Socialism are dismissed with the familiar objections of the commonplace text-book, and the technicians and scientists who guide the modern government receive their customary wigging for being the "new bureaucrats." It is hardly a solution to assert that a spiritual conversion will be required, under which the economic man must cease to occupy the centre of the stage, and economic progress must cease to be an end in itself.

There remains space only to indicate further the scope of this important book—its treatment of population problems; the probable decline of international trade; a frontal assault on the weakest position of the orthodox economist—the Trade Cycle; and some vigorous tilts at such revered figures of modern economic thought as Lord Keynes, Mr. Hawtry and Mr. Colin Clark.

The Chesterton Legend

By Austin Clarke

SOME months ago an enthusiastic publisher pointed out that G. K. Chesterton was the author of one hundred and three books. This announcement must have surprised some quiet and innocent admirers of that famous man of letters. No doubt it was his love of truth which caused Chesterton to think and write so hastily. But it is an ironical paradox that this great challenger of the modern world, with all its speed and mass production, should have helped to feed so regularly the machines which he despised.

Reaction

During the last few years the reputation of Chesterton as a writer has suffered from reaction. Can the wit and wasteful genius scattered through so many volumes compensate for their haste and volubility? Is there not something monstrous in the vanity of an author who expects us, despite the brevity of our own lives, to read one hundred and three books from his pen? An eminent English critic complained recently of Chesterton's confident lack of scholarship, and certainly an author who wrote one hundred and three books could have little time in which to ponder, reflect and complete his education. The possibility of a serious decline in Chesterton's reputation concerns us in this country; for to many of us his humorous sallies and brilliant passes have been a good defence against modern ideas and the unpleasant notions of scientists. Chesterton saved us the trouble of examining these ideas personally, and his conclusions were labour-saving, for they were contained in attractive essays, diverting verses and amusing detective stories. Now that critics are complaining that Chesterton was a superficial thinker, it is difficult to avoid the horror suspicion that his work showed symptoms of twentieth century restlessness and impatience.

It is embarrassing when the famous personalities of our time are caught without their legend. The first occasion on which I heard Chesterton speaking in public was in Dublin a few years after the Rising. He had come over, not in his own right as a poet and literary man, but as a semi-official representative of higher or lower politics. The afternoon audience in the old Theatre Royal was polite and sympathetic, and the bald-headed chairman, whose name I have forgotten, spoke in suave and ingratiating tones. Suddenly, amid all the polite unreality of the proceedings, the unexpected happened.

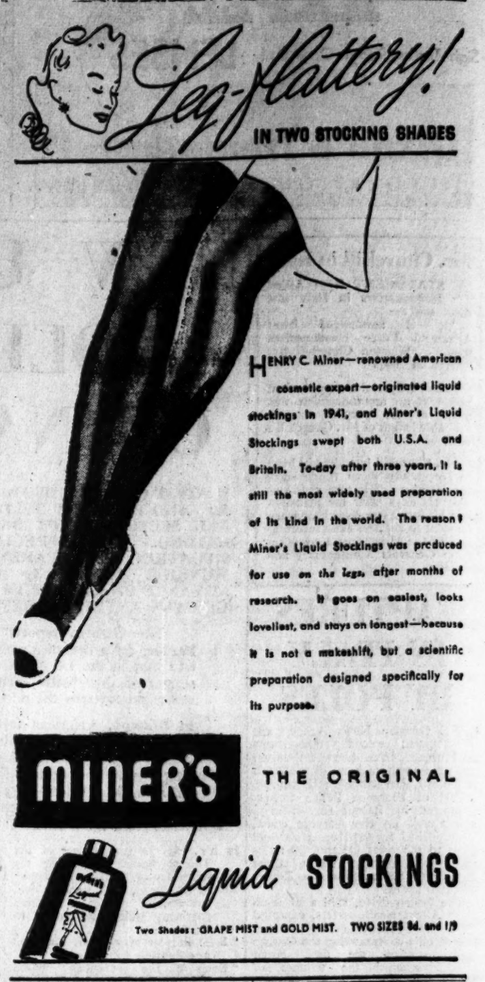

The Unexpected

Chesterton had concluded his political speech, and the Chairman was assuring him of our agreement with all that he had said, when a voice rang out in complete denial from the darkness of the upper gallery and echoed from tier to tier. It was not the brawling voice of an unseemly interrupter, but a deep, musical voice, the voice of a poet. The audience and those on the stage listened in uneasy astonishment, as if Ireland itself were rebuking them. Chesterton blinked anxiously through his glasses, and, in the seconds of silence that followed when that unknown voice had ceased, the evident confusion of the bald-headed Chairman deepened the general embarrassment. Nervously swallowing his own voice, he indicated that, before the meeting concluded, Mr. Chesterton would make a few final remarks. But those passionate and eloquent sentences which had rung through the darkness had shattered the mood of the afternoon. Chesterton's concluding remarks were vague and dispirited. It was only too evident that the audience wanted to hurry to its trams. Chesterton spent only a fortnight in Ireland, but a few months later published the usual book about the Irish problem. I turned to it with some curiosity, but there was no mention in it of that disconcerting moment when the poet, Joseph Campbell, spoke to him out of the darkness, above so many embarrassed heads.

The immense energy of Chesterton was reflected in the legend of his personality, which persisted long after he had repented his Fleet street nights. His vision of a Merrie England captured the imagination of the younger generation, and, when I first ventured into the public-houses of Chelsea, enthusiastic disciples, eagerly destroying their digestion with synthetic beer, were still pounding the tables and reciting those rhymes and catches in which the poet had celebrated the joys of mediæval drinking. So powerful was the legend that, in the late evening, it required but a pinch of fancy to see the vast genial form of the poet himself emerge through tobacco smoke among those gesticulating youngsters of the twentieth century. Yet the legend was itself a paradox, for in those years Chesterton was as closely guarded at Beaconsfield as Swinburne had been at Putney.

Disciples

The other side of the Chesterton legend was much more respectable. Week after week groups of earnest-minded people met to discuss the problems of Distributism, and spread the social teachings of their vanished leader. Chesterton was still to them the fearless defender of the small man against all tyranny, the hater of great, ugly systems, the watchful guardian of those rights-of-way down which the nonconformist mind can stray. I happened to be present on one occasion at Essex Hall when there was great excitement. After long absence, the Master himself was coming specially to hold debate with a socialist. The socialist was elderly, exact in his information, scrupulous, and possessed by a passion for justice. Chesterton was obviously delighted with his escape from his country seclusion. He gambolled and romped mentally around his unfortunate opponent, enjoying himself hugely. Then came the unexpected anti-climax. The entire audience, despite its loyalty to the Master, was stirred by a deeper instinct, that love of fair play, that tolerance of opinion, which at times save the English from their complacency and self-righteousness. Murmurs of protest began to greet every somersault of Chesterton, and, mistaking them at first for applause, he increased his antics. It was, I thought, a distressing and embarrassing situation, and I remembered that afternoon in a Dublin theatre. I did not realise at the time that an English audience is ne embarrassed.

IN TWO STOCKING SHADES

HENRY C. Miner—renowned American cosmetic expert—originated liquid stockings in 1941, and Miner's Liquid Stockings swept both U.S.A. and Britain. To-day after three years, it is still the most widely used preparation of its kind in the world. The reason? Miner's Liquid Stockings was produced for use on the legs, after months of research. It goes on easiest, looks loveliest, and stays on longest—because it is not a makeshift, but a scientific preparation designed specifically for its purposes.

THE BARNUM TOUCH

WHEN Barnum wrote an advertisement for his Circus he made the freest possible use of all the superlatives he could think up. Everything about his show was stupendous! colossal! gigantic! He maintained, you see, there was one "sucker" born every minute.

But one can't really build a lasting business on a basis of exaggeration and untruth. Lincoln showed a much shrewder judgment of human nature when he said: "You can't fool all the people all the time."

Over and over again it has been proved that in advertising truth is not only the best, but the most profitable policy. It pays, because the only advertising that can be permanently successful is the advertising that builds goodwill.

We should welcome an opportunity to show how we could advertise your goods—honestly and efficiently.

NOTICE TO PERSONS OWING DEBTS TO GERMAN RESIDENTS.
The Government made an Order on 11th instant requiring any Irish residents owing debts to persons or firms in Germany to furnish particulars of the debts to the Department of Finance, within 21 days from the date of the Order in the case of existing debts, and within 21 days from the date the debt becomes due in the case of other debts. The word "debt" is defined as including any debt due under a commercial and other contract, rents and bank balances, and the Order applies to all such debts which had not become statute barred before 3rd September, 1939.
The Order authorises the Minister for Finance to require, by notice served by him on the Irish debtor, the payment to him of the amount of any such debt, and requires the Minister to give a receipt for any sum so paid to him, and under the Order, any such receipt will operate and have effect as if it were a receipt from the German creditor.
Copies of the Order, entitled Emergency Powers (No. 335) Order, 1944 (S.R. and O. No. 240 of 1944), may be purchased at the Government Publications Sale Office, 3/4 College street, Dublin, or through any bookseller.

ART FROM THE CONTINENT

The exhibition of Modern Continental Art, organised by the Friends of the National Collections, was opened in Dublin on Thursday. Yesterday our art critic gave an account of some of the works exhibited. This is the conclusion of his article:—

There are four sombrely flaming works by Rouault to confirm the profound impression created by the wonderful "Christ et le Soldat," which raised such acute controversy two years ago and which is one of the three or four greatest things in the present exhibition. And Bonnard, the founder with Vuillard of intimisme, appears here not only as an artist who can lift domestic sentiment to Parnassus but as a great landscape painter. A fine Dérain reminds us that the spirit of Poussin still walks the French world of art, and the three admirable Marie Laurencins include an enchanting "Girl with Rose," which matches even Madame Vigée Lebrun's lovely portrait of Queen Marie Antoinette at Versailles. A gleaming early Braque will surprise lovers of the master's soberly coloured later meditations, and three Segonzacs include a "Ferme et Peupliers," which gives some hint of the quality that makes the illustrator of the "Georgics" one of the noblest minds, as well as the greatest water-colour artist, in the world to-day.

STUDY BY REPIN

Dufy, with five exhibits, is as amusing as he is distinguished. And here is Lurçat's magnificent "Decoration" with the wreckage of civilisation in the foreground and beyond an apocalyptic sun and moon darkling above a submerging world. There are two fine pictures by that too early dead Spanish great artist, Juan Gris, who used the Cubist technique to strike a note of deep gravity; a "Portrait," outstanding in its distinction and pathos, by the Spanish-Polish Frenchwoman, Maria Blanchard, and an idyllically lit harbour scene by Marquet.

The lovely drawings by Modigliani and Maillol should be noted. But it is impossible to list all the fine works by "Parisianising" artists, not French only, but Belgian, Dutch, Swiss, Italian, German, Czech, Spanish, Polish, Hungarian, Russian, and even Japanese. Lovers of Tchehov's stories, however, should not miss the expressively drawn, if rather rawly coloured, study of a group of famous musicians by Repin, an artist often praised by the great writer; and a rather humorously beautiful "Russian Peasant Girl" by Repin's most famous pupil, Valentine Serov.

Some dozen or so of the hundred and fifty odd exhibits are rather below the general standard; it is comforting to note that they are not from the most Irish of the lending collections. More important than the registering of reserves, however, is the question as to what painters Ireland has produced during the period covered whose works would mix easily with the most distinguished of the masterpieces collected here. Well, there was Hone, and Osborne, and Tuohy. And Mr. Yeats, who, for our good fortune, is still with us. But it is sobering to reflect that, after twenty years and more of national government, Hone is still inadequately represented, and Tuohy not represented at all, in the National Gallery of Ireland. Perhaps, the chief lesson we have to learn from this exhibition is that, as in Paris, the love of modern art need not be at all exclusive, but that, like charity, it begins at home.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 12, 1944.

THE SENATE

With the publication of the names of the Taoiseach's eleven nominees—irreverently known as "the cricket team"—the new Senate is complete. Some of our readers may take the view that the less said about it the better; and, in a way, we are inclined to agree with them. On the other hand, we feel it to be our duty to make certain observations on the whole system of election to the Senate in general, and on the composition of the new Senate in particular. Let us first deal with the latter aspect of the case. When, some years ago, Mr. de Valera, having secured a majority in Dail Eireann, decided to abolish the Senate, chiefly because he was unable to bend it to his will, widespread indignation was felt among those sections of the people that think at all about political affairs. The old Senate had its faults. The case could be made against it that it contained an unnecessarily large proportion of citizens who might be described as members of "the ascendancy." In some respects it was inelastic. In its efforts to hold the almost revolutionary tendencies of the Dail in check, it sometimes gave the impression that it was reactionary; but, taken by and large, it was a good Senate, in its way far more truly representative of that Irish nation which is the ideal of every patriot than the Dail, which was the exclusive preserve of party politicians. When Mr. de Valera got rid of it, his arbitrary move was resented by large numbers of the people who, by no stretch of the imagination, could be accused of sympathy with reaction, or "the old gang." There was a general belief that almost any kind of Senate would be better than none. The Irish people, on the whole, are jealous of their national Parliament, and they realise from the example of other countries that a unicameral legislature almost invariably represents a half-way house towards dictatorship. Evidently, Mr. de Valera was impressed by the volume of opposition that he met when he abolished the original Senate, and he decided to mend his hand. The result was the new Senate, which was supposed to be a body constituted mainly on vocational principles. The Senate which has just been elected is the third of its kind; and we do not hesitate to say that if the Taoiseach in a fit of pique, or for any other reason, should decide to abolish it to-morrow, few tears would be shed. What Irishman with a genuine interest in his country could be proud of the assembly of sixty "grave and reverend signiors" that will meet in Leinster House on Friday next. What, if anything, does it represent? What general title does it possess to distinction or to national eminence? The answers to these questions must be beyond the wit of man to supply.

The whole idea of the Senate, as we see it, is to provide a deliberative and contemplative body of men and women that will tend, in some degree, to put a brake on the political impetuosity of the Dail. The Senate has no real power; but the Constitution enables it to expose legislation to a more searching and intelligent criticism than is possible in the Lower House. The idea of a vocational Senate, in itself, is not bad; but to what extent is our Second House worthy of this title? Let us examine one case alone—that of the so-called Cultural and Educational Panel. One of the candidates for this panel was Dr. Richard Irvine Best, Director of the National Library, and probably one of the half-a-dozen most distinguished of living Irish scholars. In the election, Dr. Best did not receive a single first preference vote. Doubtless, he has no "national record" in the popularly accepted sense of the term; in its proper sense, his national record probably is higher than that of any other man who stood for the election. The Taoiseach's right to nominate eleven members of the Senate gave Mr. de Valera a chance to repair this glaring anomaly. He did not choose to take it. We agree wholeheartedly that the Senate ought not to be a kind of pensioned refuge for candidates who have been defeated at general elections, and à fortiori that the Taoiseach ought not to present seats as consolation prizes to persons who have failed to secure election to the Senate itself. Mr. de Valera's list, however, does happen to include unsuccessful candidates; and for this reason we cannot understand how he can have overlooked the claims of Dr. Best. In our opinion, the whole system of election to the Senate has been reduced to the absurd. From the beginning, it was a tortuous and entangled system, lending itself to all sorts of abuses and sharp practices. With the exception of the Labour Panel, sight seems to have been lost completely of the vocational idea, and it would be farcical to describe the new Senate as a vocational body. It is neither fish, flesh nor fowl; it is not even a good red-herring. From the list of defeated candidates—even from that of those who could not secure a single first preference vote—a far more representative, and, indeed, presentable, Second Chamber could be formed. Probably another Senate election will not be held for five years. May we hope that, in the meantime, the Taoiseach and his advisers will reconsider the whole machinery whereby members of the Second House are chosen? A vocational body really worthy of the name could be of real service to the nation. It could act as an enlightened and instructed corrective of the Dail, and could lift national issues outside and above the sordid arena of party bickerings. As constituted at present, the Senate can do nothing at all. It has nobody's respect, and nobody's confidence.

Music in Dublin

The summer affords a profitable opportunity for the contemplation of many things in the musical world. Throughout the months from May to October musical societies are in a state of suspended animation, and musicians recruit their energies in whatever is the opposite of hibernation. The time is favourable, therefore, for a review of the previous season's activities, and for a few pious wishes and stern admonitions concerning the season to come. The continued interest in the symphony concerts given by the Radio Eireann Orchestra has been the most notable feature of Dublin's musical life in 1943-44. It took a good deal of enterprise to establish the concerts in the first place; it took a good deal of courage to transfer them from the comfortable safety of a full Mansion House to the much larger Capitol Theatre; and both decisions have been justified fully. Nevertheless, one must inquire whether it was really necessary to make the concerts so long. The answer is probably that the price of the seats could not be reduced in any case, and that the public must be given value for its money. Only the hardiest concert-goer, however, asks for value to the extent of two and a half or three hours of music. Very few members of a Dublin audience are capable of the unbroken concentration needed to enjoy an overture, a long concerto, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in a single afternoon. One hour's intelligent listening is the most that the majority can manage—a conductor may think himself lucky if he holds his house for an hour and a half; and for this majority the keen edge of pleasure is blunted by the remainder of the concert. Shorter concerts would evoke far more genuine appreciation than the marathons which a few of last season's performances became. There seems to be a definite opening for a musical society which would learn the lessons of brevity and convenience—which would organise, for instance, lunch-time concerts, lasting only about half an hour apiece, in a hall near the centre of the city. The details would call for some thought. It would be necessary to supply food—coffee and sandwiches, at least—on the premises; it would be necessary to keep the charge for each concert down to a shilling or one and sixpence a head. Apart from the excellent, but not inexpensive, recitals of the Royal Dublin Society, chamber music is rarely heard in Dublin. A lunch-time concert society, engaging Irish musicians only, ought to be able to fill the gap with satisfactory performances at a low cost.

COMMANDER and Mrs. Peter Fitzgerald have returned to Adare, Co. Limerick.

Mrs. J. de Trafford, who arrived in Dublin this week from London, has left for Clonmel, Co. Tipperary.

Mrs. Nesbit Waddington is staying in Dublin at present.

Miss Mollie O'Rorke has arrived in Dublin from Galway.

The engagement is announced of Gerald Arthur Douglass, only son of the late Arthur D. Brewster and of Mrs. Brewster, Crailea, Temple Gardens, Dublin, and Elizabeth Maud, younger daughter of the late Dr. Harold S. Sugars, D.S.O., M.C., and of Mrs. Sugars, 18 Lavarna road, Terenure, Dublin.

The engagement is announced between Charles Edward, third son of Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Turner, Innisfail, Victoria avenue, Cork, and Bertha Elizabeth, only daughter of the late Herbert G. and Mrs. E. Vickery, Bantry, Co. Cork.

An engagement is announced between Michael, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. K. Kennedy-Skipton, St. Cloud, Beaupark, Co. Meath, and Patricia, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Johnston, 200 Howth road, Dublin. Worthing and Leicester papers, please copy.

The engagement is announced between Rev. Arthur Cecil Sparling, youngest son of Mrs. and the late Mr. H. P. Sparling, of Amigan, Rathkeale, County Limerick, and Joyce Margaret Riley, of Haytor, Hillington road, Ashton-on-Mersey, Cheshire, England.

AN IRISHMAN'S DIARY

"Whiteheaded Boy"

WHEN I wrote my little paragraph a couple of weeks ago about Ria Mooney's departure from the Abbey Theatre, I little thought that such a brouhaha would be the result. But there it is. This kind of thing does happen, and, if the present fuss ends in a thorough spring-cleaning at the Abbey, it will be all to the good.

I am glad to see, by the way, that "The Whiteheaded Boy" is being revived during the present week, which is the war time equivalent of Horse Show Week. It is one of my favourite plays. Well do I remember the first time I saw it—in London at the Ambassadors' Theatre—more than twenty-five years ago.

The Author

When I was a very small boy, not long after the Boer War, I used to see a very big boy leaning across the bridge over the Bandon River, in the little village of Ballineen, in West Cork. I stood in some awe of that boy; for, as I have said, I was terribly small, and he was terribly big. Besides, he was a son of the local parson, the Rector of Ballymoney; and in those days I had a tremendous respect for parsons.

That boy's name was Esmé Stuart Lennox Robinson. He always was known as Stuart. I did not hear much of him again, having been out of Ireland for a considerable period, until I came back to London from the Paris Peace Conference, when, quite by chance, I saw on a play-bill that the Abbey Company was appearing in "The Whiteheaded Boy," by one Lennox Robinson.

I wondered if the successful playwright was the Esmé Stuart Lennox of Ballineen days. So I set off to the theatre to find out. And, sure enough, there he was as large as, indeed larger than, life, and I never enjoyed anything more than that play.

A Great Show

To my mind, that production saw the Abbey at its best. Arthur Sinclair was there. So was Sally Allgood, and her sister, Maire O'Neill, who had married the famous George H. Mair, dramatic critic of the Manchester Guardian, and, I believe, a sort of cousin of my own. The Whiteheaded Boy himself was played, so far as I can remember, by Arthur (the Boss) Shields, whose brother, Barry Fitzgerald, was to make such a name for himself afterwards in the O'Casey shows.

The play was a great success in London, affording welcome relief from the "stagey" and artificial shows of the West End. It was taken on tour by the company to Australia shortly after I saw it at the Ambassador's, and although twenty-five years have passed, the play is as fresh to-day as ever it was.

No modern playwright has a keener sense of the theatre than Lennox Robinson—who, by the way, is known backstage as "Robbie." He also has an exquisite sense of dramatic comedy. I do not think I have ever laughed so heartily as I laughed the first time I saw "Drama at Inish"; except, possibly, when during the present Abbey controversy, I read Mr. Robinson's deathless remark: "Of course, I never read the Irish Times."

Trotting

Passing along the Bray road in a bus yesterday, I caught a glimpse of a poster in the window of a public-house, announcing that there would be trotting races in Kilcoole on Sunday. I have a weakness for trotting races, and if at all possible, I intend to be among those unavoidably present to-morrow afternoon.

Ruhleben camp, in which I spent four interesting years, was housed on one of the most famous trotting courses in Europe, and it was there that I first discovered that such a thing as competitive trotting existed. After the war, on various visits to Berlin, I always made a point of going down to Ruhleben when the races were on, and on one occasion I actually made some money by backing the animal that bore the number of the barrack in which I used to live.

"Concours Hippique"

I also visited a trotting race, this time along the public roads in St. Cyprien, in the Dordogne country, just a few months before the present war. The local French newspaper described the event as a "Concours Hippique" and it was one of the finest things I have ever seen. Incidentally, the occasion was memorable for me and my little party, because, while in the streets of the little French village—it was a lovely day in June, and the roads were lined with richly-laden cherry trees—a series of loudspeakers were blazing away in an effort to beguile the time with an assorted variety of gramophone records, we suddenly were startled to hear a very familiar voice. What was it but a record of John McCormack singing "Bird Songs at Eventide"!

An Old Specialty

Presumably the trotting at Kilcoole also will be along the roads. At any rate, I hope so; for it is great fun. There was a time when trotting was quite a specialty at the Dublin Horse Show. There were some magnificent trotting horses—or should I say ponies?—"Quidnunc" might know something about that, since he took to equitation during his western odyssey—in those days. Some of the best of them were the property of the Nolan family, the leading representative of which at present is Mr. Pat Nolan, the well-known Dublin businessman, who was captain of Delgany Golf Club a couple of years back, and is an exceedingly "sticky" player to run up against in competition.

Mr. Nolan is one of those horribly energetic persons who make one feel about a hundred years of age. Quite regularly he cycles from Dublin to Delgany, plays an arduous eighteen holes over the hilly course, and then cycles gaily home again, usually having collected in the meantime most of my spare cash in an encounter across the card table.

Kilcoole is only a stone's throw from Delgany. For a man of Mr. Nolan's calibre it is not even that; so I shall not be at all surprised if I find him casting the appraising eye of an expert over the competing animals to-morrow afternoon.

A Popular Priest

This reminds me, by the way, that the Rev. Joseph Howe, C.C., has been transferred from Delgany to Glasnevin—the parish, not the graveyard! Father Howe, who has been Chaplain to the local Carmelite Convent for the last three years, has made himself widely-known and generally popular in the whole district. He is a young man of engaging personality, an exceedingly hard worker, and a priest who gives of his best to the people under his charge. He was educated, I understand, in the Propaganda College in Rome, and was a curate in Kimmage before he came to Delgany.

Actually, Father Howe has been attached to the Parish of Kilquaid because, strangely enough, there is no Roman Catholic Church in Delgany. I am open to correction, but I should imagine that Delgany is the only sizeable village in Southern Ireland that is without a Catholic church. There is, of course, a chapel in the convent, but the nearest churches are at Greystones and Kilquaid, both more than two miles away.

Bus Conductors

Another word on behalf of the bus conductors. During the present holiday season and hot weather, these public servants are having a trying time. They are being expected to pour quarts of passengers into pint buses, and I am afraid that members of the travelling public do not always show their appreciation of the patience and good-temper with which these men tackle their daily jobs.

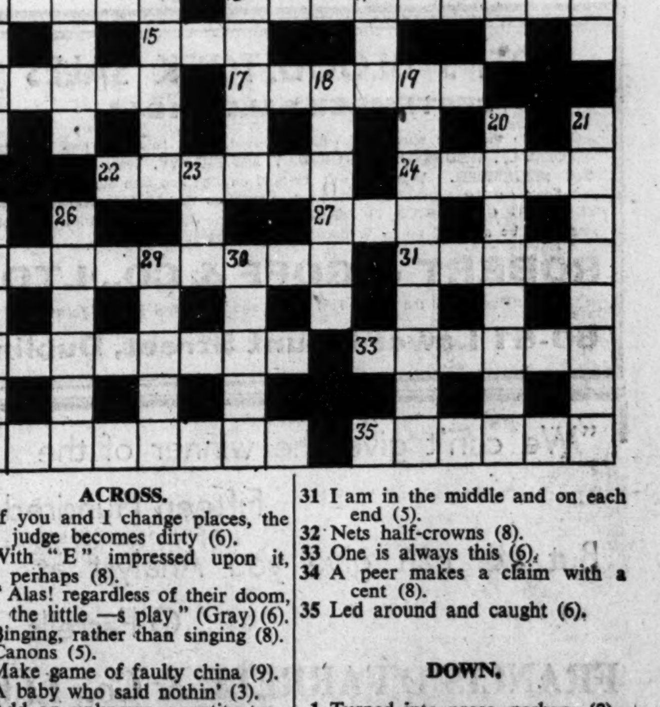

For this reason, I was glad to see the other day that a recalcitrant passenger had been fined under an Emergency Powers Order because he refused to obey the instructions of a bus conductor, and hindered him in the course of his duty. The prosecution was undertaken not by the Transport Company, but by the police.

Instances of this kind are far too frequent. Police regulations are strict, and it is grossly unfair to expect a conductor to run the risk of serious accidents by packing passengers into his bus like so many sardines. The conductors rarely lose their tempers, although, in all conscience, they often have sore provocation. Furthermore, they are exposed to all sorts of pettifogging and sometimes frivolous complaints from members of the public. And the company, like all commercial concerns, works on the principle that the customer is always right. Personally, I can assure Mr. Reynolds that the customer, in the case of the buses, very often is wrong. Most people are reasonable enough, but there are some whose attitude towards the conductors is utterly reprehensible.

ORANGE AND LEMON SQUASHES

PARTICIPATION IS SELECTION FOR RICH PARK PRIZE

THE Phœnix Plate, more popularly known as the "Fifteen Hundred," at Phœnix Park to-day will bring together the pick of this season's juveniles, with two exceptions—Overboard and Hisway.

Mafosta, from the powerful Conyngham Lodge stable, has come in for a lot of support in the last few days, but it will be a very fine accomplishment should he win under 9-7. Marita, Lady's View, the better of John Oxx's pair, Sartorial and Dasmar, will take a lot of beating; but in what is a very open race a confident selection is made of

EVERY BUSINESSMAN KNOWS

Every businessman knows that success depends upon effort—on wise planning—on a well-ordered, well-conceived scheme; in short, on taking advantage of every good opportunity that presents itself for improvement and development. Here is the ideal plan:—

£260 A YEAR FOR LIFE or £3,750 IN CASH

By instalment deposits of quarterly, half-yearly or yearly amounts you can provide the above handsome income. Should death occur in early life, £2,500 Capital sum will be paid, plus £62 10s. 0d. p.a. guaranteed bonus for each year of assurance. Capital sum and bonus is exempt from income tax, and allowance is made on instalment deposits at half the standard rate. The scheme is applicable at any age from 16 to 55, and for annuities greater or lesser than above amount.

Whatever your age or your income, fill up the form hereunder and post to us to-day.

NEW IRELAND ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.
(Actuarial Dept.), 12 Dawson Street, Dublin, C.2.

I am interested in your Annuity Benefit Scheme. Please forward further particulars relevant to my own personal case. It is understood that this places me under no obligation whatever.

Illegal Race Meetings

AS a result of a meeting in the Shelbourne Hotel, Dublin, last evening, of the Bloodstock Breeders' and Horse-owners' Association of Ireland, an attempt will probably be made to deal with "flapper"—illegal—race meetings. The matter was raised by Mr. T. A. Morris, well known in racing and coursing circles.

He said that "flapper" meetings were a menace to racing. It was common knowledge that well-known horses, given false names for the occasion, were being raced at these illegal meetings, at which as much as £50 in prize money was put up for a single race. Horses for which licences were held under the Irish racing authority were taking part, and he thought the Association should bring the matter to the notice of the Turf Club.

The following resolution was passed: "The Association requests the Government to give early consideration to the establishment of a national stud." This was proposed by Mr. J. McGrath and seconded by Colonel MacCabe.

Mr. W. E. Wylie, K.C., said he entirely agreed, and felt that this should be stopped if it was possible to do so.

The Duc de Stacpoole said that, as a member of the National Hunt Committee, he could say that in every case of this sort in which evidence was obtained action had been taken. He asked any member who knew of a case which could be proved to make a report.

Mr. I. J. Blake, who presided, said the Council of the Association would discuss the matter and do their best to deal with it.

Captain C. B. Harty, supported by Mr. J. A. Farrell, introduced a discussion on one mile and a half hurdle races, as a result of which a resolution was passed to the effect that during the emergency the two miles hurdle should be the standard, but that an effort should be made to provide a number of hurdle races over lesser distances.

The following elections were made:—Hunter Section: Mr. T. W. Dreaper and Senator W. Quirke. Thoroughbred Section: Mr. Richard Ball and Mr. W. J. Mitchell.

Scratchings—Golden Victory and Yung-Yat (Aug. 9th, 9 a.m.), Pat Feeney and Michael Nolan (Aug. 9th, 4 p.m.), and Galway Girl and South Riding (Aug. 10th, 9 a.m.) out of all engagements.

How Your Shares Moved

BANKS STILL IMPROVING

THERE was a small expansion in business on the Dublin Stock Exchange yesterday, and markets closed the week on a firm note. The principal feature was the continued strength of Banking issues. Bank of Ireland stock rose a point to 354, Munster and Leinster 1/6 to 137/6, and smaller gains were recorded in National and Provincials.

Guinness Ord. held steady at 137/-. Among Rails, G.S.R. Gtd. were in demand, and closed 10/- higher at 74. McBirney Ord. rose sharply to 7/6, and Goulding Ord. advanced 9d. to 32/-. Irish C.S. Buildings jumped 2⅜ to 71½. May Roberts Ord. rose 6d. to 50/6, and Sunbeam Wolsey Pref. advanced 1/- to 37/-.

Blyvoors, 2/3 in 1940, Now £6 Each

Blyvoors 10s. shares crossed the £6 mark for the first time on the London Stock Exchange yesterday, though they closed at that figure. The phenomenal results produced by this Rand gold mine—its correct title is Blyvooruitzicht Gold Mining Co.—has caused great excitement in the shares at various times, and they have been rising almost without interruption for the last four years. In 1940 they were as low as 2s. 3d., and even last year they could have been bought for little more than £2.

Whether the present price discounts the future no one can say at present, but the price movement shows what can happen, and does actually happen, in the Mining market.

A mining expert contends that Blyvoors will become one of the biggest producers on the Rand, and thinks the shares should go beyond £10. That remains to be seen, and it may be added that it would be better for the small investor to steer clear of mines, as they are too speculative and require special knowledge.

REVIVAL IN SHIPPING

ALTHOUGH the London Stock Market was inclined to idleness and dullness yesterday, the undertone of "blue chip" Industrials was very firm with an upward trend in last ten minutes.

Selling of Calcutta Trams encouraged by market belief that intricacies of deal will necessitate arbitration further depressed price 1s. to 69s.

Country buyers were in the market again for Shipping shares, Anchor Line rising 3s. 6d. to 56s., and Dene Shipping 9d. to 19s. 7½d., both on possible deal rumours.

Although good gains were scored by Attock Oil (75s. 6d.) and Ultramar (78s. 6d.) both up 1s. 3d., buyers were turning to Trinidads on post-war prospects. Leaseholds at 5⅛ were up ⅛.

Late revival in West Africans, led by Bibiani, 31s. (up 1s. 3d.), as new E.P.T. allowance means profit standard will be raised by one-third, and should mean larger dividends soon.

MORRIS EARNS MORE

Preliminary figures issued yesterday by Morris Motors, Ltd., show that profits in the year to December 31st last increased by £201,679 to £1,980,852. The final dividend is to be 7½ p.c., again making a total for the year of 17½ p.c., tax free. Immediately before the war the company was paying 45 p.c., less tax. Gross profits have been well maintained throughout the war years, but the amount required for taxation has increased. Capital is £5,650,000, of which £3,650,000 is in 5s. Ord. units, quoted at 46s. 3d.

OILS UP AGAIN

The activity which was aroused in the Oil market by the announcement of the agreement between the U.S. and Britain was continued yesterday, with further appreciation in values. The agreement promises the orderly development of oil supplies throughout the world, and their distribution at fair prices, thus avoiding any possible cut-throat competition for markets.

Apart from the general satisfaction with the agreement, there were also special factors. The rise, for instance, in Attock Oil, which put on another 1/- to 75/3, is based on the hope that the Burmah Oil Co., already a holder of the company's Debs., will take a still closer interest in the company.

On the other hand, in contrast with the rest of the market, Mexican Eagles were easier on the rather puzzling message from Mexico published yesterday.

This declared that owners of foreign oil holdings in Mexico are warned that the Government intends to seize all such lands to meet the country's post-war fuel requirements.

The owners will be indemnified, but royalties will not be paid.

BURDEN OF TAXATION

In presenting the report and accounts of Friary Holroyd and Healy's Breweries to June 30 last, the directors point out that the actual payment to the Government in respect of duties and taxes for the year was £1,439,500, equal to 90 per cent. of the net earnings of the company.

The report shows a balance from trading accounts, after depreciation, of £343,161, against £342,898 in the 1942-43 financial year. With rents and other revenue the figure is increased to £396,894, the net trading profit, after general expenses, of £269,401 comparing with £267,316.

From this sum, taxation and Debenture interest is provided for, leaving £156,392, after the inclusion of £18,650 taxation surplus.

As already announced, the Ordinary annual distribution is repeated at 15 per cent., while £40,000, instead of £30,000, is this time added to the general reserve fund.

The £1 Ordinary units are 72/6 ex dividend.

POWDERED MONEY

A suspensory sentence of two months' imprisonment was passed by District Justice Ua Donnchadha, Dublin, yesterday, on John Byrne (57), night watchman, Killester avenue, who was charged with having stolen £2 5/- from a coat in a cloakroom of Messrs. Wills's tobacco factory, South Circular road, where he was employed, on July 28th-29th.

A trap had been set, consisting of notes and silver, dusted with green powder, and later Byrne's hands had a number of green powder stains on them. Byrne denied the charge.

THEFT OF GOLF BALLS

"Golf balls are impossible to get, and if these boys are caught stealing them again I will have no hesitation in sending them to a reformatory," said District Justice McCarthy, in the Dublin Children's Court, yesterday, when he applied the Probation Act in the case of two boys who had been accused of stealing a ball from Clontarf Golf Club.

Mr. McCarthy sent a sixteen-year-old girl to a reformatory for two years for stealing money from a number of young children.

SUFFOLK SHEEP SHOW

The 19th annual show and sale of pure-bred Suffolk sheep for the South of Ireland Branch of the Suffolk Sheep Society, to be held at Messrs. Gavin Low's premises, 50 Prussia street, Dublin, on Wednesday next, has attracted a very representative gathering of sheep from the leading flocks in Eire. A very attractive feature to breeders is the inclusion of some ewe lambs from the Gerrardstown and Harristown flocks. Mr. John F. Wright has agreed to adjudicate. The judging commences at 10.30 on Wednesday and the sale follows at 1.30.

AIR RAID WARNING SIRENS.
In addition to the routine tests of the Air Raid Warning Sirens carried out on the last Saturday of each month, intermittent tests of the electrical circuits associated with the Warning System have been in progress over a period of approximately 10 days. Notwithstanding the precautions adopted to ensure that these tests should be effected without the emission of an audible signal it has happened in the case of sirens located on premises not under the immediate control of the Corporation that a warning was sounded. This statement is published to allay any uneasiness which may have been caused to members of the public in consequence of the unintentional sounding of such Sirens.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT AND ATTRACTIVE SALE OF RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY AT DELVIN.

WE have received instructions from the Executor of the late Dr. J. F. O'Keefe to SELL BY AUCTION, at his residence, Delvin on FRIDAY, 18th AUGUST, at 12.30 p.m., official time, all his right, title and interest in (1) Part of the Lands of Castletown, Delvin, containing 1 acre 1 rood, Statute Measure or thereabouts, with residence and out-offices thereon, held in fee. P.L.V.: Lands, £3; Buildings, £14 15s. (2) Part of the Lands of Clonyn, containing 1 acre 2 roods, Statute Measure, or thereabouts, held in fee, situate to the rear, and adjoining Lot 1. P.L.V.: Lands, £2. (3) Part of the Lands of Clonyn, containing 12 acres 2 roods. Statute Measure, or thereabouts, held in fee. P.L.V.: Lands, £17 15s. (4) Part of the Lands of Castletown-Delvin, containing 2 acres 1 rood, Statute Measure, or thereabouts, held from the Irish Land Commission, subject to the revised Annuity of 14s. 8d. Folio 832 P.L.V.: Lands, £3 10s. (5) Part of the Lands of Ballinvalley and Ballinaskeagh, containing 58 acres 3 roods, Statute Measure, or thereabouts, held from the Irish Land Commission, subject to the revised Annuity of £14 13s. 10d Folio 4867. P.L.V.: Lands, £37 5s.; Buildings, 10s.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The Residence, standing in well laid out grounds about 30 yards off the main street of Delvin, is approached by very fine entrance gates and drive. Although in the heart of the town it is so situated as to afford every privacy to the occupier. It is a semi-basement house, with spacious hall, stairway, drawingroom and diningroom on the ground floor. Upstairs there are five bedrooms, w.c., etc. At the back there are five apartments, including kitchen, scullery, dairy, etc., as well as stairway leading to servants' quarters overhead. There is a water-pumping system into the house.
The Out-offices are ample, and include coach-house, four box stalls, several cattle sheds, fowl house, hayshed, garage, etc. There is a well-stocked fruit and vegetable garden at the rear. Both Residence and Out-offices are in perfect repair and need no outlay.
The Lands, some of which are Freehold, are of the best quality, and are situated adjacent to the town of Delvin, and all adjoining the public road. They are well fenced, watered, sheltered, and free from disease.
This Property, situated at Delvin, on the main road from Kells to Mullingar, has a Dublin bus service passing by the door. It affords a rare opportunity to intending purchasers of a conveniently situated residence and lands. It is within 10 miles from Mullingar, 5 from Athboy, 5 from Killucan, and 40 miles from Dublin. It will be sold in one or more lots.
Further particulars may be had from:—
Messrs. LITTLE, O'h-UADHAIGH & PROUD, Solicitors having Carriage of Sale, 12 Dawson Street Dublin; or the Auctioneers.

COUNTY OF MEATH.

SALE OF LARGE RESIDENTIAL FATTENING FARM.

WE have received instructions from John Finnegan, Esq., to SELL BY AUCTION on the Lands on THURSDAY, 24th AUGUST, at 3 p.m. (Official Time): All his Right, Title and Interest in Part of the Lands of Caucestown, Athboy, containing 141 acres, S.M., or thereabouts, held from the Irish Land Commission, subject to the revised annuity of £96 11s. 6d. Tithe Rent Charge, £5 15s. 0d. P.L.V. £140 14s.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

This Property is situate about 1 mile from Athboy Railway Station on the Dublin-Granard bus route. The Lands are of the very best Fattening quality, with no waste. They are well sheltered, watered and fenced, and afford a rare opportunity to intending purchasers of buying a well-placed Fattening Farm within easy striking distance of Dublin.
There is a good 2-storey, slated Residence, in perfect order, as well as extensive out-offices, on the lands. The out-offices and lands were specially laid out and used as a stud farm in former years, and would still be eminently suitable as such, or for training purposes, as there is a special track for galloping horses on 60-acre field.
